

Bristol author doing well as Red Sox fan in NYC

Christine Auclair, a graduate of Bristol Eastern in 1987, if I remember correctly, is succeeding as a freelance writer, author, publisher and photographer while living in New York City with her partner, Heidi, and two cats.

After writing her first book, entitled, "You Can't Find A Rainbow in the House," she was invited to an international book-signing event in Chicago with her great niece, Lauren Auclair Lachance, who illustrated the book.

Another book she has written is "Living in New York as a Red Sox Fan: Tips and Topics from within Enemy Lines." Sounds like an interesting read, especially with the numerous Red Sox and Yankee fans we have here in town.

Christine credits her mother's encouragement for her many interests in life, including the outdoors where she captures nature "in the raw" as a photographer.

For those of you wanting to visit with Christine and, perhaps, purchase one of her books, she will be at Imagination Nation on Sunday, Nov. 2, for a book-signing. I'm not sure on which book yet, but details will follow in the near future.

To learn more about this Bristol gal, log onto www.ceilswheelspublishing.com.